Good News Facts

Scores in 1985 climbed for the fifth straight year on the California Achievement Tests. Maryland youngsters—third, fifth, and eighth graders—are well above national norms.

More than 60 percent of Maryland's disadvantaged students are gaining a year scholastically for each year in school.

Over 3,500 disabled Marylanders, almost a thousand of them severely disabled, were rehabilitated last year, with help from the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation. That's a record high.

Maryland's schools regularly provide special programs to 51,000 gifted youth. At 8% of the school population, that's number three in the United States.

Over 82,500 volunteers helped out in schools with 4 million hours of service in 1985. At the federal minimum hourly wage of $3.35, that's a lot of commitment—and a lot of love.

Last school year 11,000 teachers screened 57,000 young children to uncover early—and treat early—potential learning problems.

Last year almost 71,000 Maryland students in grades three through eight read ten or more books within six months—and received special certificates to prove it.

If your library doesn't have the book you want, don't despair. Last year the State Library Network helped 200,000 citizens find books their own libraries didn't have.
